In "Fred Harvey Jewelry 1900-1955," Dennis June throws a lasso over 1900s souvenir Indian jewelry. Hundreds of specimen were painstakingly measured, weighed and identified. Unique and valuable turquoise gemstones were discovered. Symbols charts and hand painted Photostint postcards provide the background. The book pinpoints the violent struggle between "AUTHENTIC" jewelry and its erstwhile protagonist, the "SOUVENIR." The complexities become twisted and embroiled by a discovery the author identifies as "hybrid" You are invited to enjoy the synergy the HYBRID brings to the table, and much more. This book asks the pertinent questions, then answers them. The answers come with a ton of historical context, full illustrated. The outstanding macro photography highlights souvenir Indian jewelry of the early 1900's. Defined are terms such as "Coin" and "Ingot" and emphasizes the importance of "Patina." Two full chapters are devoted to Falsehood and Ethics. Both full federal laws (1935 & 1990) are included; as is a comprehensive timeline dating back to the Louisiana Purchase. This is a valuable book about silver Indian jewelry of the Fred Harvey era. Alex Vander Poole, collector. Dec 13, 2013 Dennis June's Fred Harvey Jewelry 1900 - 1955 is not only a valuable resource for the collector, it is full of fascinating information that will help all of us understand the Fred Harvey era of souvenir Indian-inspired jewelry. I was amazed at some of the things I read. The book is interesting and well-researched. It has an extensive bibliography and helpful glossary. June utilizes several private collections and hundreds of specimens photographed for the book. It is available with lots of full color photos. Like many others, I cast aside dozens of early century souvenir bracelets in my day. Despite that, a seed of curiosity was set by our family friends. Natch. We shall call them the Chambers: it was they who asked our opinion of a silver bracelet we had never before seen. It was lightweight but had a magnificent Number Eight spiderweb turquoise stone. They showed us the eBay link from which it originated. It was difficult coughing up the words to tell them their "find" was souvenir, despite the stellar turquoise gemstone and otherwise claims of eBay's seller. This incident continues in the first two paragraphs of my book Preface. And my self-imposed ten-year odyssey began that very day; a seed of curiosity that blossomed into a fully inflamed passion, "Fred Harvey Jewelry," a term I'd never heard before eBay. So eBay became the arrow point of my curiosity, beginning with that very link to the Chambers' auction win. "What?," I wondered, "is Fred Harvey Jewelry?" Having been in the "Indian business" for nearly a half century, souvenir jewelry once comprised a steady revenue source for our own family Indian stores. We called them souvenir bracelets, so as to define them for buyers. When a youngster, we called them "Railroad bracelets" because they seemed to come from the train culture. But eBay called them "Fred Harvey bracelets." I was, indeed, curious . . . Yes, I admit a hands on education with the souvenir jewelry of the early fifties and later. We sold a ton of it. In many months, it was first among many curios which mostly paid the bills. We later drifted into an Indian Gallery mode, abandoning machined goods, including the best selling souvenir Indian jewelry. The Chambers' bracelet ignited a youthful flame in my soul. My early curiosities (also related in the book) were rekindled when a memorable and specific "Pretty Girl" bracelet reappeared fifty years after the first time I'd seen it. That beautiful machined bracelet, along with others in an Oregon antique mall, inflamed a fervor that has shaped our lives to this day. Studies have shown that souvenir silver Indian jewelry has seeped into a majority of the vintage Indian jewelry collections. That they would be confused with authentic silver Indian bracelets is no surprise. What IS surprising, is that otherwise well educated collectors found the same value in Fred Harvey bracelets as they did authentic handmade ones. As patterns arose among the many collections studied, the book started weaving its own tale. The fifty-five year study-span revealed many subways that had to be reconnected through the Fred Harvey platform. More questions appeared than were answered. Many theories were debunked, some one hundred eighty degrees. Others were confirmed. The words of over fifty leading authors helped assemble details and fill gaps. But the bracelets told the story. And I am happy Schiffer Publishing shared my enthusiasm for my study of Fred Harvey Jewelry by publishing this wonderful volume. And my photos. Thank you. Enjoy!

I love this book. I use it everyday for info. I am a long time Fred Harvey jewelry collector, and wouldn't be without a copy of this book.

This book dispelled a lot of long held beliefs concerning "Indian Jewelry". So many things that I believed to be etched in stone were fabrications suited for tourists. The manipulation of the native people for trade works is a true reason to be upset, once again, about the mishandling of native american crafts. This book is a "must-have" for anyone interested in Southwest Indian Jewelry.

Very informative book with super pictures. Really enjoy reading and studying.

Great book with lots of documented research. I learned a lot and felt confident it was accurate information.

I was thrilled with Fred Harvey Jewelry 1900-1955. I started collecting Fred Harvey bracelets two years ago and selected them strictly on eye appeal. I found out about the book from Paul Rose owner of Kokopelli Gallery in Santa Fe. This book has an excellent progression of the history, heavy glossy pages and beautiful pictures of the many styles and types of bracelets. I love it and it is a joy to have it in my library. In fact, I have it on my coffee table for friends to enjoy.

Wonderful, I love it. Thanks so much!

Excellent guide to Harvey native jewelry offerings during "Heyday" of the "Harvey Houses" run in conjunction with Western railroad travel for tourists.

I get trembly looking at all the wonderful photos of thejewelry and places I knew as a teenager inSAnta Fe. It is worthit just for thephotos!
