Dianne Todaro is passionate about children's education and creating books that engage communication between parents, teachers and the child. She believes the best gift we can give a child is the ability to articulate what they need to be nourished in their everyday life. After becoming a primary school teacher, her career path over the past 20 years has evolved to include a range of book projects that promote her passion for commercial and educational value on issues that benchmark the hallmarks of being an everyday kid. Her recent concepts Puberty Girl and Puberty Boy are now translated in 10 countries worldwide. Dianne recently restructured Interrelate Family Centres, the school services division. Her role as the coordinator of all school programs charged her with the responsibility for providing leadership to a team of educators who teach sexuality and relationship education to 30,000 parents and children per year. Dianne is the director of her own company, communicate kids. Visit www.communicatekids.com for more information.
