"'I want to be a Zen master,' declared the 24-year-old, altruistic Irish scholar Maura O'Halloran; and these letters and journal entries chronicle her experience in pursuit of that goal from 1979 through 1982 in Japan. Her pages provide a clear window for those curious about the reality of Zen training. Profound episodes co-exist with lighter moments. Her account is all the more poignant for the fact that she met an untimely death at 27 in a bus accident in Thailand while on her way home to start a Zen center in Ireland. Her substantial gift of insight is a fine legacy." (Publishers Weekly)"A rare and valuable window into the world of intensive Zen training as experienced by a Western woman. Maura began her Zen study in 1979 at the age of twenty-four. Westerners had done this training before, but as a Western woman, Maura was an oddity in the hyper-male world of monastic Japanese Zen. Her beautiful writing is full of unexpected phrases and word-pictures and overall, a sense of such uncloying positivity that it is a truly joyful read. Read her book and you will be astonished." (Tricycle Blog)"Some of the most important lessons I've learned about Buddhism haven't come from the Dalai Lama or Thich Nhat Hanh. Rather, they came from Maura O'Halloran. [Pure Heart, Enlightened Mind] brought the Buddhist experience into my mind and psyche in a way that no dharma book or doctrine ever had.... For me, Maura's book is a gift, offering guidance and inspiration. Reading about her life, I'm able to reflect more clearly on my own experience, and to glimpse what I do not yet now or understand. While other books have helped me to appreciate the concept of enlightenment, reading Maura's account of her awakening made the possibility of it much more real. I come back PH,EM often. Every time I read it I break down into heaving sobs, unable to finish. To this day, I'm unable to explain why I'm moved so deeply." (Sumi Loundon, editor of Blue Jean Buddha, in Buddhadharma)"A fascinating portrait of an apprentice sage. The book unfolds as a grand adventure." (New York Times Book Review)"Among the many titles recounting personal experiences in Buddhist schools, O'Halloran's stands out as particularly clear and moving and unique: she was the first of few Western women allowed to practice in a traditional Japanese Zen monastery." (Library Journal)"Maura-san," or 'Soshin'--celebrated during her lifetime in the Japanese media as an anomaly of anomalies, a female Irish Zen monk--has come to be regarded as a Buddhist bodhisattva or saint of compassion. [Pure Heart, Enlightened Mind is] a remarkable record of a life fully lived, a unique and inspiring and even heartbreaking book. [...] Like Virginia Woolf in her diaries or Elizabeth Bishop in her letters, Maura O'Halloran appears on the page singular and whole. So this is a person! She is a Zen monk, yes, but she is also a splendidly educated Irish-American from a large and loving family, intellectually ambitious, attractive and attracted to men of all sorts, hungry for the world's goods. These aspects of herself fulfill one another rather than cancel each other out. While it is called Pure Heart, Enlightened Mind, the book is full of Maura's soul. [...] the journal itself is personal, sometimes abstruse, but rarely myopic; as a writer, Maura O'Halloran can't help but communicate. It is complemented perfectly by the letters to her family interspersed throughout. In them she is unusually confident and clear-headed about her search for enlightenment. She makes no apologies, gives no defenses. [...] How sad I felt as I finished this book, which I will read again: sad that Maura O'Halloran didn't survive to return and enrich our culture, and sad that she had to go away from us in the first place." (Commonwealth)"The writings contain insightful observations of Japanese family life, particularly of the Zen master and his family. A book that will appeal to YAs interested in religion, contemplation, and/or interaction with other cultures. The tone is light, and there is not much doctrinal explanation. A quiet, relaxing read." (School Library Journal)"Many have gone to the East in search of enlightenment but none has told the story as vividly and honestly as Maura O'Halloran. Her tragic death was a great loss but she has left us the legacy of this marvelous book." (Melvin McLeod, Editor-in-chief of Shambhala Sun and Buddhadharma)"The sincerity of Maura's journals and the difficulty of her journey place in sharp contrast contemporary notions of Zen in ten easy audio-tapes." (Holy Cross Magazine)"A beautiful book which presents Maura's diaries and journals during her time in Japan. It is a wonderful tribute to Maura. I felt a bond with Maura reading the book, and wrote the song, 'Soshin'." (Musician Luka Bloom)

In 1979 Maura O'Halloran left a waitressing job in Boston and traveled to Japan, only to find herself studying Zen at an old temple tucked into a Tokyo backstreet. There, and in the remote countryside of northern Japan, Maura began a compelling journey into the depths of her own heart and mind. Her journals and letters home reveal the gentle humor, compassion, and profound wisdom won only by intense hardship. Insightful and absorbing, Pure Heart, Enlightened Mind offers an unmediated glimpse into her endless commitment to awakening. Published nearly twenty-five years after Maura's tragic death, this commemorative edition includes her previously unpublished letters and unfinished novel, adding new insight and rich detail to what is already one of the most-loved dharma books of all time.

This is one of my favorite books. I purchased this Kindle version even though I have a hard cover. The spiritual journey of Maura O'Halloran is so warm, poignant and open-hearted, it's a delight to read over and over. Her honesty and humbleness shines through her words. This is not a long, ponderous tome that you have to wade through... every passage speaks clearly of a true, 20th century saint.

This not so much a book as an edited journal and letters. I was spellbound by Maura's inner experiences and encouraged by her honesty about her struggles with her practice. I have found only a few books that relay the actual experience of zen as a practice. Most are instructional and though that is useful, I need to know that others find the path difficult and struggle within themselves also. I don't want to know about perfect practice - I want to know about the flaws and how to overcome them. This book is about that and a beautiful spirit.

This is a captivating book in the form of a diary Maura kept as a very young woman going to Japan and being accepted to study in a Zen monastery. The work is tedious and challenging, as are her reactions to the petty characteristics of those she lives with. She has an all-consuming desire to become enlightened. I was amazed and awed by her perseverance. A very moving account by such a young person.

I read this book 20 years ago and never forgot it. Now with new material it's even more profound. I love her humanity, how she has the same worries and self doubts about her meditative practice that I have experienced. It helps me to keep showing up to meditate. Maura is inspirational, yet very human and real. I applaud her family for sharing these writings with all of us.

What an amazing young woman to be so clear....Especially enjoyed the diary of her travels at the end. Consistently humble- never lets on that it's enlightenment that she is achieving. Simple honest...terrific enjoyable read. Interesting look at Zen Buddhism from a non Japanese, female perspective.

Irish Catholic, Buddahist monk, with my name! God looks at the heart, more than your religious or non religious heart!

An inspirational account of a truly remarkable woman.
